This session will cover the key components of an effective indoor air quality program for school districts including meeting the requirements of 2009 Wisconsin Act 96. He will help bring that topic into focus using his many years of experience in law enforcement and emergency planning. You will find his presentation interesting, relevant, and very important. Finally, Captain Horter will describe two separate multiple homicide incidents that took place in the City of Brookfield, and he will discuss what lessons can be learned for school safety and security personnel from these two tragic incidents.

Gaining a better understanding of these rules and the finding the best way to implement them in the school setting will help you create and maintain a safe and healthy environment for students and staff. This course will review AHERA asbestos rules, EPA lead rules for child occupied facilities, EPA radon recommendations, as well as many other potential environmental hazards including hazardous waste, underground storage tanks and safe drinking water rules. Session #2.4 School Threats: Doug Reynolds, President, Safety-Quest, LLC.

A culture of school safety creates a shame-free mentality in which daily teasing and bullying is not accepted as a normal part of adolescent life. School environments characterized by bullying, cyberbullying, and meanness can lead to student isolation and fear. At best, school environments that turn a blind eye to bullying and teasing inhibit the work of school-learning and growth. At worst, such environments allow behavior that fosters fear and fury and may lead to psychological and physical violence. In this session you will learn time-tested best practices related to dealing with threats of violence that can result from bullying. From Doug's session you will also gain a better understanding of what we know about bullying and what we can do to address this challenge in our schools.

Based on his 15 years in the school safety and security environment, and his experience in working with schools across the state and the country, he has compiled a number of steps that he believes schools should take immediately, and in the long-term. This session was presented to many school board members and it clearly caused some controversy, but he calls it as he sees it.

Track #1.5 Safety: The Show Must Go On.....Safely: Brenda Lee Johnston, Executive Director, Schauer Arts & Activities Center

Safety in the theatre is always an important concern, no matter the level of professional or amateur with whom you're working. It is especially important in schools where you may be dealing with students, teachers, parents, and/or professionals. This session will discuss the important safety precautions to have in place when working with people of varied backgrounds and skill levels (and how to work with people of various backgrounds/skill and knowledge levels). We will cover topics including how to prepare for and manage appropriate supervision during construction, rehearsal and performance; storage of sets, tools, and hazardous materials; emergencies including evacuating audience; working with machinery and properly building sets; and working with rigging and curtains. What precautions do you need to take for falls, electrical hazards, and stunts? We'll answer these questions and share theatre terminology to help get all involved in your next production on the same page.
